MRS. WHEELER SUES FOR BACK ALIMONY; TO FIGHT DIVORCE

Former Stage Favorite Says
 Millionaire Husband Owes
 Her $3,750.

PURSUES HIM IN VAIN.

She Denies Indiscretion and Accuses Wealthy Father-in-Law of Hounding Her.

Claudia Therese Carlsstedt Wheeler or started her fight to prevent Albert G. Wheeler Jr. from divorcing her by filing in the Supreme Court to-day an application to have all proceedings in the millionaire's action stayed until he pays up $3,750 in back alimony.

After he has paid up he may proceed with the trial of the divorce action, but the former stage favorite says she will strenuously defend the action and at the proper time make her absolute innocence clearly appear.

Wheeler has charged her with having been indiscreet with Walter N. Greene, whose identity has thus far not been disclosed, although it has been said that he too would enter into the litigation and seek a vindication for himself as well as Mrs. Wheeler.

Mrs. Wheeler brings into the suit the name of her father-in-law, Albert G. Wheeler sr., the multi-millionaire who helped build the Chicago subway, by accusing him of having spent more than $145,000 to crush her in an endeavor to carry out a family conspiracy to part her from the younger Wheeler.

Mrs. Wheeler, however, would not be parted without a fight or at least a chase, and in her papers she tells how she pursued Wheeler from New York to Boston and then to Chicago and back again more than a score of times, attempting on each occasion to cause his arrest for neglecting to pay her back alimony.

Sometimes her pursuit was nearly successful. Two or three times, she says, she ran into him, but he always managed to make a magic exit. In June, 1912, she recalls, she was awarded a separation and $300 a month alimony.

money, which she set out to collect. She discovered, she alleges, that Wheeler had given up his apartment in the Ansonia and had departed westward. She followed and in Chicago ran smack into Mr. Wheeler sr., who, she says, told her that if she wanted any information about his son she would have to get it herself, "as he had spent $145,000 in trying to crush her out and would give her no information whatever."

Finally, in February of this year, Mrs. Wheeler narrates, she discovered that her husband was in Boston connected with the banking firm of Richardson, Hill & Co. She asked Louis D. Brandeis's law firm to sue and collect the alimony due her, and detectives were hired to locate Wheeler and serve the papers upon him. Before he could be reached, though, he disappeared, and Mrs. Wheeler and her personal counsel went on another hunt for him. The two spied him lunching with William S. Butler, the Boston banker, in the Parker House. Mrs. Wheeler shouted to her lawyer to get the papers ready to leave with him, but Wheeler, she says, must have heard the rustle of the papers or something, for he excused himself before the lawyer could procure the attendance of the Sheriff.

Mrs. Wheeler subsequently made fifteen trips between New York and Boston to locate her husband, and finally she obtained a warrant for his arrest. No sooner was it out, Mrs. Wheeler says, than she learned that her husband had departed for New York, and when she followed found he was taking his meals at the Plaza.

She says she made a second attempt to interrupt his noonday repast by the service of papers, but, for an hour after she received information as to his whereabouts he disappeared. She searched all the hotels and clubs in Boston, she says, always reaching the places just a few minutes after her husband had gone.

Mrs. Wheeler says that ever since March, 1910, her husband has abandoned her. On the day he left their apartment at the Dakota, Seventy-second Street and Central Park West, she alleges that he took practically all her personal belongings, including her wardrobe, wedding presents and other property.
